

Paid-social drip sequence

Every email we plan to send to contacts from the LinkedIn and Meta campaigns, in order, with the recommended timing and the reasoning behind each one. Goal of every track: a meeting booked on Michael's scheduler.

What the data told us

From the HubSpot portal, 410 paid-social contacts, February to September 2026.

- Speed is the biggest gap. Median first touch on a paid-social lead is 31 hours. 140 leads (39%) were never contacted; none of them booked. Research puts a five-minute response at several multiples the qualification rate of a 30-minute one.
- The flow that shows the calendar wins. Meta leads come through the website, qualify in the modal and are sent straight to the scheduler: 24 of 30 qualified Meta leads booked (80%). LinkedIn leads mostly come through native Lead Gen Forms and never see a calendar: 13 of 171 qualified LinkedIn leads booked (8%).
- Bookings are front-loaded. Of leads that booked after a form fill, 53% did so within 3 days, 72% within 7, 89% within 30. So: a dense 18-day sequence, then a light monthly note that never really ends.
- Nothing has really been sent yet. No paid-social contact has received a HubSpot marketing email. One sales sequence went to 78 contacts in mid-June, months after they arrived, and produced 2 meetings.

Rules every email follows

- Plain text from a named person (Edmund, or Michael for A4). No images, no buttons, one link. Plain-text B2B email reaches the primary inbox and gets replies at roughly double the rate of designed HTML.
- Under 150 words, first-name greeting, subject of 3-7 words in sentence case. One ask per email: book, or reply.
- Numbers first, hypotheticals only. The $50M example is the homepage's own worked case. No IBO Advisors transaction, client, count, size or timeline is ever referenced (10-year confidentiality rule).
- Instant emails ignore the clock. Scheduled emails go at 7:30am recipient time on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday; if a delay lands on Friday to Monday, it holds to Tuesday.
- Every track stops the moment a meeting is booked, the contact replies, unsubscribes, or a lead status of Unqualified, Not Interested or Contact In a Year is set. Never more than one email a day or three a week.
- Every scheduler link carries a campaign tag per email, so HubSpot's meeting-booked attribution shows which email produced each meeting.

Send order at a glance

Track	Who	Emails in order	Timing
A	Owner, $3M+ EBITDA, no meeting	A1 (or A1b), A2, A3, A4, A5, A6, A7, then monthly notes L1-L10 and a quarterly re-ask	Day 0, 1, 3, 6, 9, 13, 18, then day 45 onward
B	Owner, $1M-$3M	B1, B2, B3, B4, B5 (repeats), plus monthly notes	Day 0, 7, 21, 45, 90 and every 90
C	Owner, under $1M	C1, then monthly notes and the quarterly B5	Day 0, then day 45 onward

Track	Who	Emails in order	Timing
D	Adviser (CPA, wealth, legal)	D1, D2, D3, D4, then monthly notes	Day 0, 3, 10, 20, then day 45 onward
F	Meeting booked	F1, F2 (SMS); on a no-show F3, F4, then A6	24h and 2h before; +30 min, +2 days, +7 days

Placeholders: {{firstname}} is the contact's first name (default "there"). [scheduler link] is Michael's HubSpot meeting link with the contact's details pre-filled and a per-email campaign tag. Every email ends with Edmund's signature block (name, title, direct phone, iboadvisors.com) and the required footer (postal address, one-click unsubscribe); these are omitted below to save space.

Track A - Qualified owner ($3M+ EBITDA), no meeting booked

Seven emails in 18 days, roughly two a week, then the monthly notes. A1 fires the moment the lead syncs; A2-A7 land at 7:30am recipient time, Tuesday to Thursday.

A1

Send: Instantly (within 60 seconds of the lead syncing), any hour | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Your IBO question

Preview text: A 20-minute, confidential conversation with Michael.

Hi {{firstname}},

Thanks for asking about the Independent Buyout on LinkedIn. I'm Edmund Breitling, a partner at IBO Advisors.

Short version: an IBO gives you private-equity-level liquidity and valuation without selling to private equity, without giving up control, and in most structures without capital gains tax on the proceeds.

The fastest way to see whether it fits your company is 20 confidential minutes with our managing partner, Michael Chasen. Pick a time here:

[scheduler link]

If you'd rather I call, reply with a good number and a time that suits you.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

The lead just raised a hand on an ad titled "IBO discussion", so the ask belongs in the first email, not the third. Speed is the point: a response inside five minutes is worth several multiples in qualification rate, and today the median first touch on our paid-social leads is 31 hours. The body does three jobs only: prove a person saw it, restate the promise in one sentence, hand over the calendar. The "reply with a number" line gives phone-first owners a route that isn't a form.

PAIRED SMS (0-5 MINUTES, ONLY WHERE A PHONE EXISTS AND THE FORM DISCLOSED TEXTING)

Edmund from IBO Advisors here. I've just emailed you a link to grab 20 minutes with Michael Chasen about the Independent Buyout. Reply STOP to opt out.

PAIRED CALL TASK (DUE IN 60 MINUTES, 8AM-7PM RECIPIENT TIME; OTHERWISE NEXT MORNING AT 8AM)

Voicemail: "Hi {{firstname}}, Edmund Breitling at IBO Advisors following up on your LinkedIn note about the Independent Buyout. I've emailed you a link to 20 minutes with Michael Chasen; happy to talk now as well. My number is ..."

A1b (abandoned scheduler only)

Send: 60 minutes after a qualifying website-form submit with no meeting booked |
From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Your calendar link

Preview text: In case the page closed before you picked a time.

Hi {{firstname}},

You qualified for a conversation with Michael a little while ago, but I don't see a time on the calendar yet. Pages close, phones ring; here is the link again, with your details already filled in:
[scheduler link]

Nothing to prepare. Twenty minutes, confidential, and you'll know by the end whether an IBO is worth exploring for your company.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Website-form leads were already redirected to the scheduler and got that far; the only thing between them and a booking is a closed tab. This is the highest-intent moment in the funnel (qualified Meta leads, who all come this way, book at 80%), so the email does nothing except put the link back in front of them, pre-filled. It replaces A1 for this group; they then join the track at A2.

Subject: The $26M difference

Preview text: Same company, same value, two outcomes.

{{firstname}}, one number explains why owners look at this.

Take a company worth $50M. Sold to a PE firm, after federal and state capital gains the owner typically nets about $37.8M, plus a required rollover and a board that now outvotes them.

The same company, at the same $50M, structured as an IBO, nets about $64.2M: the sale proceeds are tax-free, and the owner keeps warrants on the future upside and keeps running the business.

That's $26.4M on the same enterprise value. The full comparison, line by line, is here:
iboadvisors.com/blog/ibo-vs-pe-numbers-comparison

Worth 20 minutes to run your numbers?
[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Day 1 is still inside the window where half of all our bookings happen (53% book within three days), so this email has to give the single strongest reason to act. For a $3M+ owner that reason is arithmetic, not philosophy. The figures match the homepage exactly so nothing contradicts what they see when they click through. One link to the post, one to the calendar, no third thing.

A3

Send: Day 3, 7:30am recipient time (Tue-Thu) | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: How an IBO actually works

Preview text: Five sentences, no jargon.

{{firstname}},

The mechanics, in five sentences.

The company borrows against its own cash flow, the way a PE buyer would. Instead of a PE fund, the buyer is an employee trust the company sets up. You sell some or all of your shares to it, and under Section 1042 the gain can be deferred indefinitely. The company's income becomes largely tax-exempt, which is what makes the debt affordable. You keep the CEO seat, the board, and warrants that pay out as the company grows.

It is the transaction PE firms run on companies like yours, done without the PE firm. Longer version: iboadvisors.com/blog/independent-buyout-explained

Questions are normal at this point. That is what the 20 minutes is for:
[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

After the number in A2, the natural objection is "that sounds too good; what's the catch?" A3 answers it by showing the machinery before they have to ask, which is what a careful owner does before booking anything. It also pre-empts "isn't this just an ESOP?" by naming the trust plainly inside a leveraged-buyout frame. Day 3 keeps the twice-a-week rhythm without crowding A2.

A4

Send: Day 6, 7:30am recipient time (Tue-Thu) | From: Michael Chasen

Subject: A note from Michael Chasen

Preview text: Three questions I'd ask about your company.

{{firstname}},

Edmund mentioned you'd asked about the IBO. I co-founded Blackboard, took it public and sold it for $1.8 billion, and I've been on one side or the other of more than sixty M&A transactions since. I started IBO Advisors because most owners are only ever shown two doors: sell to private equity or sell to a strategic.

If we spoke, I'd ask three things: roughly what EBITDA you're running, how much of the company you want to keep, and what you'd do with the proceeds. From those I can usually tell you in 20 minutes whether an IBO is worth exploring.

Reply with any of the three, or grab a time here:

[scheduler link]

Michael

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

By day 6 the lead has had the offer, the number and the mechanism. What's missing is a reason to trust the people. A short note from the founder, in his own voice, with public credentials, does that; it is also the one email in the sequence that changes sender, which restarts attention in a crowded inbox. Asking three concrete questions lowers the bar from "book a call" to "type two numbers", and any reply exits the automation into a human conversation.

A5

Send: Day 9, 7:30am recipient time (Tue-Thu) | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: What PE hopes you never learn

Preview text: Control, rollover, and the "second bite".

{{firstname}},

Three things that don't appear on the summary page of a PE term sheet:

- the minority-stake veto list that lets a 30% investor run your board
- the 10-30% rollover that means you haven't really sold
- the earn-out that only pays if you hit numbers you no longer control

We wrote them up plainly:

iboadvisors.com/blog/minority-pe-stake-board-control-veto-rights

iboadvisors.com/blog/what-happens-after-private-equity-buys-your-company

None of those exist in an IBO, which is the point. If a PE letter is sitting on your desk, it's worth 20 minutes before you answer it:

[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Leads still unbooked at day 9 are usually comparing, not ignoring: most $3M+ owners are approached by PE regularly. This email arms them against the alternative rather than re-selling the IBO, which reads as advice instead of pitch. It also catches the timing-driven lead ("a letter on your desk") with a concrete trigger to act now. Two article links is the one exception to the single-link rule, because both are objection content and belong together.

A6

Send: Day 13, 7:30am recipient time (Tue-Thu) | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Three options, pick one

Preview text: Reply with a number.

{{firstname}}, to save us both time, reply with a number:

- 1 - I'd like to talk in the next couple of weeks (I'll send times).
- 2 - Interesting, but not for 6-12 months (I'll check back then, nothing in between).
- 3 - Just learning for now (I'll send one useful note a month, no calls).

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

After two weeks, a self-serve booking is less likely than a reply, so this email is built to be answered in three seconds from a phone. It also does the sorting for us: "1" goes to Edmund, "2" sets the lead status to Contact In a Year and exits, "3" moves them straight to the monthly notes. Owners appreciate a way to say "not now" that isn't unsubscribing.

A7 (breakup)

Send: Day 18, 7:30am recipient time (Tue-Thu) | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Should I close your file?

Preview text: No hard feelings either way.

{{firstname}},

I haven't heard back, which usually means one of two things: the timing is wrong, or the emails are. Either is fine.

If it's the timing, I'll leave you alone apart from a short note once a month with one thing worth knowing about owner exits. If you'd rather not get those, reply "no" and I'll stop entirely.

If I misread it and you do want the 20 minutes, the link still works:

[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

The breakup is consistently one of the two best-replying emails in any sequence (10-33% reply rates in published data) because it removes the pressure and gives permission to answer honestly. It also sets the contract for the monthly notes so they never feel like more chasing. Day 18 is past the two-week window in which 83% of our bookings occurred, so nothing is lost by stepping back.

CATCH-UP VARIANT FOR THE 140 NEVER-CONTACTED LEADS AND THE UNBOOKED QUALIFIED LINKEDIN LEADS FROM JULY-SEPTEMBER

Replace the first line with: "You asked about the Independent Buyout a while ago and we never followed up properly; that's on us." Everything else stays. Send this week.

Long tail - monthly notes (all tracks, from day 45)

One insight, one link, one soft close, first Tuesday of each month. L1-L3 are written out; L4-L10 rotate through: Why the exit conversation is broken; Seven doors other than PE; If the next owner is family; Cost-plus contracts and the IBO (government contractors only); an industry note (healthcare or restaurant leads, by campaign); Picking an adviser at $3M+; MBO or PE? The order alternates "protect yourself from a bad deal" with "here is another path" so the series never reads as ten reasons to hire us.

L1

Send: Day 45, first Tuesday of the month, 7:30am recipient time | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: The pros and cons, honestly

{{firstname}},

Selling to private equity is the right answer for some owners. The trouble is that the people explaining it are usually the buyers.

Here is the version we'd want a friend to read before signing a letter of intent: what PE does well, what it costs you, and the questions to ask before you're in exclusivity.

iboadvisors.com/blog/selling-to-private-equity-pros-and-cons

If any of this is live for you right now, 20 minutes with Michael is the quickest way to know where you stand:
[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

The first monthly note has to prove the series is genuinely even-handed, or the owner tunes it out. Leading with "PE is right for some owners" earns the right to be read next month.

L2

Send: Month 2, first Tuesday, 7:30am | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: How they'll value your company

{{firstname}},

Before any buyer names a number, they've already decided the multiple. Here's how PE firms build it, what they quietly deduct, and why two firms can land 2x apart on the same company.

iboadvisors.com/blog/how-pe-firms-value-a-company

If you want a rough range for your own numbers, the calculator uses the same industry multiples:

iboadvisors.com/business-valuation-calculator

If any of this is live for you right now, 20 minutes with Michael is the quickest way to know where you stand:

[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Valuation is the question every owner has and nobody answers plainly; it is the most-clicked topic in this category. Pointing to the calculator also puts a fresh EBITDA figure into HubSpot if they use it, which can re-qualify or re-rank them.

L3

Send: Month 3, first Tuesday, 7:30am | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: The second bite, explained

{{firstname}},

"You'll roll 20% and get a second bite of the apple" is the most persuasive line in private equity. Sometimes it's true. Here's how the rollover actually works, who controls the exit that produces the second bite, and the two clauses that decide whether you ever see it.

iboadvisors.com/blog/rollover-equity-second-bite-explained

If any of this is live for you right now, 20 minutes with Michael is the quickest way to know where you stand:

[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

By month three the lead may be in an actual PE process. The rollover is where owners lose the most and understand the least, so this is the note most likely to prompt a "can we talk before I sign?" reply.

Q (quarterly re-ask)

Send: Every 90 days, in addition to the monthly note | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Still the right time to talk?

{{firstname}},

Quick one. It's been about three months since you first asked about the Independent Buyout. Things change: EBITDA, a PE approach, a partner who wants out, a health scare.

If any of that has happened, the 20 minutes is still here, still confidential:

[scheduler link]

If not, ignore this and I'll keep the monthly notes coming.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

The monthly notes deliberately don't push. Once a quarter the sequence needs to ask directly, because 11% of our bookings came more than two weeks after the lead and some came months later. Naming the real triggers (PE approach, partner, health) is what makes an owner realise the timing has changed.

Track B - Owner, $1M-$3M EBITDA

Goal: stay warm, earn the referral, re-qualify when EBITDA crosses $3M. Slower cadence; monthly notes run in between.

B1

Send: Instantly | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Honest answer on fit

Preview text: What $3M of EBITDA has to do with it.

Hi {{firstname}},

Thanks for asking about the Independent Buyout. I'd rather be straight with you: the structure works when a company is at roughly $3M of EBITDA or more, because the company's own cash flow has to carry the buyout. You told us you're in the $1M-$3M range, so it may not be the right tool today.

Two things that might still help. Our calculator shows how many years of growth get a company across that line:
iboadvisors.com/business-valuation-calculator

And this covers the options that do work at your size:
iboadvisors.com/blog/business-exit-planning-every-option

If your numbers are closer to $3M than the form suggested, reply and tell me, and I'll set up a call.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

An under-threshold owner who gets the same pitch as a $10M owner will book a meeting that goes nowhere, or feel misled. Saying "probably not today" immediately is the most credible thing the firm can do. It is the only email in this track that asks for a reply, because a meaningful share of self-reported EBITDA bands are wrong.

B2

Send: Day 7 | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: The four levers that move EBITDA

{{firstname}},

Most companies in the $1M-$3M range are closer to $3M than their P&L says. Four things buyers will add back or reprice, and that you can move on purpose:

1. Owner compensation above market rate.
2. One-off costs: litigation, a bad hire, a system migration.
3. Pricing that hasn't kept pace with your costs.
4. Product or customer mix: the low-margin work that fills the schedule.

Worth an hour with your CPA to restate the last three years on that basis. If it lands you above $3M, reply and we'll talk.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

The most useful thing to send someone below the line is a way over it. Add-backs are the fastest, and they often reveal the owner was qualified all along. Practical, no link, no sell.

B3

Send: Day 21 | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Exit planning, eight steps

{{firstname}},

Whatever the exit ends up being, the owners who do best start two to five years out. Here's the sequence we'd follow, in order, with what each step is worth at the closing table:
iboadvisors.com/blog/exit-planning-for-business-owners

Step one is the one most owners skip.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Positions the firm as the adviser for the years before the exit, which is exactly where a $1M-$3M owner sits. Three weeks in is late enough that the email feels like advice, not follow-up.

B4

Send: Day 45 | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Other doors: MBO, minority recap

{{firstname}},

Two structures that do work below $3M of EBITDA, and that PE firms rarely mention because they don't need a PE firm:

A management buyout, and how it's financed:
iboadvisors.com/blog/management-buyout-financing

A minority recapitalisation, taking some money off the table without selling control:
iboadvisors.com/blog/minority-recapitalization-explained

If either sounds like your situation, reply and I'll point you to the right kind of adviser.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Keeps the firm useful to a lead it can't serve yet, and stops them taking a bad PE deal in the meantime. Offering to point to another adviser is the referral relationship starting in the other direction.

B5

Send: Day 90, then every 90 days | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Has EBITDA crossed $3M?

{{firstname}},

Quarterly check-in, one question: is the company at or near $3M of EBITDA now, or on a clear path there in the next 12 months?

If yes, reply "yes" and I'll set up 20 minutes with Michael. If not, no need to answer; I'll check again in a few months.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Re-qualification by reply is cheaper and more accurate than any form. A "yes" moves the contact to the qualified-owner track; silence costs nothing. Between these, Track B contacts receive the monthly notes.

Track C - Owner, under $1M EBITDA

One honest email, then monthly notes and the quarterly re-qualify only.

Subject: Honest answer on fit

Hi {{firstname}},

Thanks for asking about the Independent Buyout. Straight answer: it's built for companies at roughly $3M of EBITDA and up, so it isn't the right tool for you today, and I'd rather say so than waste your time.

What might help now: a plain comparison of every exit route at every size, and a calculator that shows the growth it takes to reach the range where an IBO works.

iboadvisors.com/blog/business-exit-planning-every-option

iboadvisors.com/business-valuation-calculator

I'll send one useful note a month on owner exits. If you'd rather not, unsubscribe below and no hard feelings.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Same honesty as B1 with no reply ask, because the gap is too large to close by restating add-backs. One email, then the monthly notes and the quarterly B5 re-qualify; anything more would be spend without return.

Track D - Advisers (CPAs, wealth advisers, attorneys)

Goal: an intro call and a referral relationship. Four emails over 20 days, then the monthly notes.

D1

Send: Instantly | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Thanks, and a quick question

Preview text: Do you have a client in mind?

Hi {{firstname}},

Thanks for reaching out about the Independent Buyout. Most of our best conversations start with an adviser who has an owner client being courted by private equity.

Do you have a specific client in mind, or are you learning the structure for your practice? Either way, 20 minutes with Michael Chasen is the quickest way in:
[scheduler link]

Everything is confidential, and we're happy to describe how we work with referring advisers on the call.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Advisers convert through a different question: not "is my company a fit?" but "do I have a client who is?" Asking it first lets Edmund prioritise the reply, and the calendar link is there for the ones who already know.

D2

Send: Day 3 | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: How to spot an IBO candidate in your book

{{firstname}},

The profile that tends to fit, so you can scan your client list in five minutes:

- $3M+ of EBITDA, steady or growing
- Owner in their mid-50s or older, or a partner who wants out
- Already receiving private equity approaches
- A management team that could run the company without the founder
- Bonus: cost-plus government contracts (the tax treatment is unusually favourable)

If two or more of those describe a client, it's worth a conversation before their next PE letter:
[scheduler link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Gives the adviser a tool they can act on immediately, which is what makes a referral source useful rather than merely interested. The checklist doubles as qualification criteria, so the referrals that come back are the right ones.

D3

Send: Day 10 | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: What we do for referring advisers

{{firstname}},

Three things advisers usually want to know before introducing a client:

1. Confidentiality: the owner's first conversation is with Michael, off the record, with nothing sent to anyone.
2. Your role: you stay the client's adviser throughout; we work alongside the CPA, wealth adviser and counsel, not around them.
3. Content for your clients: we co-write short guides and run private briefings for adviser client groups on the IBO and on reading a PE term sheet.

If the third one is useful, reply and I'll send an example.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Addresses the adviser's real objection (losing the client relationship) and offers something they can use with clients, which is the currency advisers respond to. The reply ask is deliberately about content, a low-stakes yes.

D4 (breakup)

Send: Day 20 | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Close the loop?

{{firstname}},

I'll stop here unless you tell me otherwise. If a client of yours ever gets a PE approach and wants a second path, the 20 minutes with Michael is a standing offer:

[scheduler link]

I'll send a short note once a month on owner exits; reply "no" if you'd rather not.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Same logic as A7: a permission-based exit that sets up the monthly notes and keeps the offer standing for the day a client calls.

Track F - Meeting booked: protect the meeting

Starts when a meeting is booked. HubSpot's own confirmation email stays on. Aim: no-show rate under 15%.

F1

Send: 24 hours before the meeting | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Tomorrow: three things to have handy

Preview text: Nothing to prepare, just have these to hand.

{{firstname}},

Looking forward to tomorrow. To make the 20 minutes count, it helps to have three things in your head (no documents needed):

1. Roughly what EBITDA the company is running this year.
2. How ownership is split today, and how much of the company you'd want to keep.
3. What you'd want the proceeds to do for you.

Michael will take it from there. If the time no longer works, reschedule here rather than no-showing:
[reschedule link]

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

No-shows are the leak after the booking. A concrete, low-effort prep list raises the perceived value of the meeting, and offering the reschedule link explicitly converts would-be no-shows into moved meetings we can still track.

F2 (SMS)

Send: 2 hours before the meeting | From: IBO Advisors (SMS)

Reminder: your 20 minutes with Michael Chasen (IBO Advisors) is at {{meeting time}}. Video link: {{meeting link}}.
Need to move it? {{reschedule link}}

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Two hours is close enough to be acted on, far enough to reschedule. SMS reaches the owner who is between meetings and not in their inbox.

F3

Send: 30 minutes after a missed meeting start time | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Missed you, grab another slot

{{firstname}},

Looks like today didn't work; it happens. Here's the link to pick another time:
[scheduler link]

If something has changed and it's no longer the right moment, just reply and tell me.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Sent while the missed slot is still fresh, with no guilt, so rebooking is the path of least resistance.

F4

Send: Day 2 after the no-show | From: Edmund Breitling

Subject: Still worth the 20 minutes?

{{firstname}},

One more try. You booked the call for a reason, and that reason probably hasn't gone away. The calendar is here:
[scheduler link]

If you'd prefer a quick phone call instead, reply with a number and a time.

Edmund

WHY THIS EMAIL, AT THIS POINT

Reminds the owner of their own intent without repeating the pitch, and offers the phone alternative for the ones who found the video format the barrier. On day 7 with no response, the contact receives A6 ("Three options, pick one") and rejoins the qualified-owner track at A7.

The one-time catch-up, this week

Send the A7 catch-up variant to the 140 never-contacted leads and every qualified LinkedIn lead from July to September without a meeting. Breakup-style emails to warm-but-neglected lists typically return 10-15% replies; on about 120 qualified leads that is 12-18 conversations from one email.

Two fixes before reusing the existing HubSpot emails

The current greeting renders as "Hi there,," with no first name. Email 2's figures are off: "$64.2" and "$26.7" are missing "M", and the site's own numbers are $37.8M net after a PE sale, $64.2M via IBO, a $26.4M difference. Two sentences in that email are also broken ("And it often with a 10-30% required rollover", "there are no rollover requirement"), and its subject says "$100M exit" while the body works a $50M example.